50%

Perinatal mental health is gaining more attention as a critical issue within maternal health with severe racial and health equity concerns.

- Almost 50% of Black mothers will experience maternal mental health (MMH) conditions, according to the Maternal Mental Health Leadership Alliance.
- Compared to white women, Black women are twice as likely to experience MMH conditions but half as likely to receive care.
- And . . . Black Dads experience post partum depression at similar rates as Black Mothers!

PSI has developed an internationally recognized, unique, and evidence-based training program for health providers and social support networks to address perinatal mood & anxiety disorders.

It is critical that this program be supported in order to increase the number of providers available to offer culturally competent mental health care during and after pregnancy.
